Delete from line 18 to 26:

Moreover, it has its own environmentally and socially negative externalities, such as the dependence on critical materials. ~~Therefore, our main objective is, first, to reduce necessary distances wherever possible and, second, to ensure a shift towards active modes and collective and shared means of transportation. This must be achieved through a global approach to mobility, which takes into account transport but more broadly the determinants of travel demand: town planning, land policies, greater attention to soaring property prices but also the social and cultural construction of our way of life. An ecological transport policy is necessarily systemic.~~
